Everyone knows someone whose life has been touched by cancer. On Sunday, June 3, thousands of people around the world will gather to observe the 31st annual National Cancer Survivors Day. Each year this day is designated to honor everyone who is living with a history of cancer – including America’s nearly 14 million cancer survivors. “A ‘survivor’ is anyone living with a history of cancer – from the moment of diagnosis through the remainder of life,” according to the National Cancer Survivors Day Foundation.
